

Fort Standard

Stacked Leather Chair

Made entirely of leather, the components of this occasional chair begin their journey as raw cow hides through an experimental process developed by Fort Standard. After soaking for days in diluted wood glue, dozens of layers of leather are placed into a custom mold and pressed with great force to create the thick laminated seat reminiscent of a giant leather shoe heel. Longer hides are rolled into tubes to make the legs and combination arm rest/back rest. All of the parts are then cooked in a large oven for several weeks to remove all waterweight drying the parts out completely for assembly.
